Deep Sidhu

On January 23, 2021, Deep Sidhu, a key leader of the farmers' protest movements, was arrested by the Punjab police for his alleged role in the violence at the Red Fort in New Delhi. Sidhu, who has been a prominent figure in the farmers' movement and has faced repeated legal actions, is now facing charges related to violent incidents during the protest. The arrest comes amid a broader crackdown on those involved in the farmers' protests, which have drawn international attention.

The farmers' movement, which began in November 2020, has drawn massive support from farmers across the country, with thousands participating in rallies and sit-ins. The movement was primarily against three farm laws introduced by the government, which protesters say will benefit large corporations and reduce their bottom line. The farmers have been advocating for their rights and livelihoods, with some activists participating in a weeklong sit-in protest near the Indian capital.

At the ABPI elections in West Bengal's sugar belt, political parties are using all tricks and trades to grab control of the region, including the use of the word “sugar.”

While all parties have been busy campaigning, at least one candidate has appeared to have taken a different path. A candidate named “Sugar” is contesting the election as an independent candidate.

However, the use of the name “Sugar” has caused some confusion among voters, with many wondering if it is an ode to the region’s famous industry or a play on words.

NEW DELHI: The Supreme Court on Wednesday issued notice to the government of Karnataka in a corruption case involving the former minister B.S. Yeddyurappa.
Despite multiple rounds of talks, India and China are nowhere near a framework for disarmament and de-escalation. The latest face-off between Indian and Chinese troops near the village of Galwan Valley on the border of the two countries has taken matters to a new level. Xi’s China is a superpower that can impose considerable costs on India. At the operational level, China is trying to push down the Indian army. The imbalance is far more serious if you look at the growing gap between the economic balance of power between China and its neighbours has shifted decisively in Beijing’s favour. The focus on protecting the land frontiers has already begun to reduce the much-talked-about nuclear deterrent. The imminent release of the skeletal release of the first round of independence in 1947, the British army was still required for any traditional, readymade security by a country. The consequence, very much evident in the British army, was losing the power to be able to fight and win wars. The second shock did not follow China making the rules of the game from the start of the 1960s. When India is on the offensive, the Chinese army is on the defensive. That is the situation now. Post independence, millions started left behind are refugees. Agriculture, armed forces recruitment became the principal vocation of the people of this region. Over a period of time, due to the recalcitrance of the Chinese government, the people of the Chinese border and the local army became the mainstay for the people. With war with Pakistan looming over the horizon in 1965, the armed forces were concerned that they would be confronted in their fight against Pakistan of these territorial disturbances in the upended Punjab.

A WORRISOMELY DYNAMIC

THE CONSTITUTION DRAFTED by BR Ambedkar opened up many pathways to emancipate and make the oppressed equal. The Constitution was not just the foundational law of the country but also the blueprint for the nation’s development. It was a document of hope and aspiration, with a vision of a society that was just and equitable. Yet, despite its lofty ideals, the Constitution has not always been able to live up to its promise. The recent farm laws, which were announced in September, are a perfect example of the challenges that the Constitution faces in modern India. The laws, which were aimed at increasing agricultural productivity and promoting trade and commerce, have been fiercely opposed by farmers across the country. The laws are seen as a threat to the country’s food security, as they allow large corporations to take over small family farms. The laws have also been criticized for neglecting the needs of small farmers, who are the backbone of the Indian economy. The Constitution guarantees the rights of farmers to own and operate their land, and the new laws undermine these rights. The laws have also been accused of being anti-farmer, as they do not adequately protect the rights of farmers. The Constitution is a powerful tool, but it is only effective if it is used to promote the interests of all citizens, including farmers. The laws, which are designed to benefit large corporations, are a threat to the Constitution, as they violate the fundamental rights of farmers. The Constitution is a document of hope and aspiration, but it is only effective if it is used to promote the interests of all citizens, including farmers.

VOLUNTARY DIET

This refers to the editorial, "Law & Diets" (16 January 27). The choice of the word "voluntary" in this context suggests that protecting farmers seems to have a priority over the health of the people. It also suggests that the harm caused by the food system as a whole is not seen as a moral issue. The essay is an attempt to reorient the discourse around food and diet, and it is an encouragement to think more deeply about the role of agriculture in society.
