With Melinda Gates, BILL GATES chairs the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, the world’s largest private charitable foundation. After their annual letter, on the challenges of the pandemic was released. He spoke with ANANT GOENKA.

Excerpts:

"With the one thing that he would change if he was re-elected to rebrand the internet..."

You have spoken about the extent of polarizations in societies around the world. Do you think Big Tech has a role to play in making societies less polarized? Or do you think the job for the government to do what what role is in the government to do? And what do you think should be the role of Big Tech?

Bill Gates: Well, the basic assumption that you’re making is that there are bad—that’s going to be a political decision. So I am going to ask you to indulge me with a rapid fire series of questions, where I am going to ask you for a quick response.

[Asked the one thing that he would change if he was re-elected to rebrand the internet...]

You think Big Tech should play a role in making societies less polarized, or should the role be for the governments to make the laws...?"

The central bank may have been the main game in town in 2020. But fiscal policy will likely play a bigger role in shaping the growth recovery in 2021.

"We expect government expenditure to remain around 15% of GDP. That will make room for monetary policy," said V. G. Ayyar, chief economist, ICRA. This would involve a by-passing of financial intermediation with a recognisable fiscal role.

And despite elevated government expenditure, the fiscal deficit was actually 3.5% in 2019-20. A year later, it may be as high as 9.6%. That’s thanks to a sharp rise in one-time revenue—around 15% of GDP. The cash surplus, which had been around 2% in 2019-20, also doubled to 3.6% of GDP, given that the government was able to sell assets at a higher price.

As a growth recovery begins to take shape, the government is likely to make a near-term recovery in fiscal policy. The deficit is expected to narrow to 7%,

Why are markets falling and what lies ahead

Sandeep Singh

The COVID-19 vaccine is expected to give a push to global economy in the coming months, leading to a recovery in the markets. But the recovery will not be uniform across all sectors and will depend on various factors, including government policies, demand and supply dynamics, and investor sentiment. In this article, we will discuss the potential impact of the COVID-19 vaccine on the global economy and the markets.

The Economic Recovery

The COVID-19 pandemic has severely impacted the global economy, leading to a sharp decline in economic activity and a rise in unemployment. However, with the advent of the COVID-19 vaccine, there are signs of a recovery in the global economy. In recent months, there has been a significant upturn in economic activity across different countries, as more people are getting vaccinated and restrictions are being gradually lifted.

The Financial Market Recovery

The financial markets have also seen a significant recovery since the advent of the COVID-19 vaccine. The stock markets, which had dropped sharply in the early stages of the pandemic, have now recovered and are trading at higher levels. The bond market has also shown signs of recovery, with interest rates remaining low.

The Outlook

The outlook for the global economy and the financial markets is generally positive, with expectations of continued growth and recovery. However, there are still some concerns, such as the potential for a new wave of infections, economic uncertainty, and geopolitical tensions, which could impact the recovery.

Conclusion

The COVID-19 vaccine is expected to provide a crucial boost to the global economy in the coming months. However, the recovery will not be uniform across all sectors and will depend on various factors. Investors should keep a close eye on these factors and adjust their portfolios accordingly.
India's 'Doomsday Clock' remains set at 100 seconds to midnight

The time has been on the clock since 2013, when world leaders set it at 3 minutes to midnight. The latest move by the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, which created the clock in 1947, reflects growing concern over the risk of nuclear war.

The doomsday clock, created by the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, is a visual representation of the risk of nuclear war and other existential threats, with 0 representing the risk being eliminated and 100 representing the risk being catastrophic.

The decision to move the clock closer to midnight is based on a variety of factors, including the ongoing nuclear arms race between the United States and Russia, the absence of any agreement to limit or reduce their nuclear stockpiles, and the continued modernization of nuclear weapons.

The clock is set by an international panel of experts who evaluate global threats and scientific and technological developments, with the goal of providing a clear and accessible way to understand the risks facing humanity.

Scrap gains on short squeezing: What is it?

In developed markets, hedge funds and other large investors sometimes short stocks after they’ve identified a third party that could buy the shorted stock and prevent losses. The idea is to check for all possible third-party buyers of the stock, including holding companies, competitor bids and borrowing from short lenders.

The phenomenon is called a “short squeeze.” When the short squeeze doesn’t take place, the price might fall further, leading to additional losses for the short seller. Short sellers are investors who bet that the price of a stock will fall, by selling the stock they do not own and buying it back when the price falls.
