We face prejudice, inequality & injustice... feel safe here

A 30-year-old秘rve officer who moved to the city from a rural area in UP, Mr. Raja described the atmosphere in the lab as welcoming and supportive.

“I was a bit apprehensive about coming to a city lab, but the atmosphere is very warm. I feel accepted here and am able to focus on my work,” he said.

One of the challenges faced by people with disabilities in urban areas is the lack of accessible infrastructure. However, the laboratory was designed with inclusivity in mind, ensuring that people with disabilities can participate fully in the research activities.

Mr. Raja also mentioned the support of his colleagues, who have been instrumental in helping him adjust to the new environment.

“Everyone has been very supportive. We work as a team and I feel like I’m part of a family,” he added.

The laboratory’s commitment to creating an inclusive workplace is evident in its policies and practices, which prioritize the needs and perspectives of all its members.

“We are committed to creating an environment where everyone feels valued and respected. This includes people with disabilities, as well as other underrepresented groups,” said Dr. Mehta.

The laboratory continues to strive towards excellence in research and inclusivity, and we are proud to be part of this journey with people like Mr. Raja.

We welcome you to learn more about our work and how we are making a difference in the field of molecular biology research.

I don’t wish to anticipate the Budget. There is a universal demand that the government should provide investment in health infrastructure and increase in dearness allowance to support that demand. The FM may provide more funds under the two heads. Otherwise, it would be unwise, on account of the absence of any change in their approach or behaviour.
India’s telecom department has cut down the notice period needed to enter into the telecom spectrum business by one year. The move came after the Supreme Court’s interim order. The aim is to make it easier for the authorities to make frequency arrangements for the telecom sector.

Now, almost exactly 385 years after the infamous Dutch tulip mania, one may be justified in asking whether the GameStop ‘tulip’ may be a new phenomenon. After all, some are seeing the rise of Wall Street’s retail investors as a modern-day version of the Dutch market mania, when tulip bulbs were the hot commodity and the market soared.

However, the situation is quite different. The Dutch tulip mania occurred in an era when most people were illiterate, and the idea of owning something as intangible as a tulip bulb was very appealing. In contrast, today’s investors are well-informed and have access to a wealth of information on the internet.

Moreover, the current situation is not driven by a shortage of supply, as was the case with tulip bulbs. Instead, it is driven by a lack of supply of stocks, particularly in the technology sector.

The GameStop situation has been exacerbated by the pandemic, which has led to a surge in demand for stocks, particularly in the technology sector. Retail investors have been drawn to the sector because of the high growth rates and the potential for large profits.

However, the situation is not sustainable in the long run. The current surge in demand is unlikely to continue indefinitely, and the market is likely to correct in the future. Investors should be cautious and avoid taking on too much risk.

In contrast, today’s investors are well-informed and have access to a wealth of information on the internet.

Moreover, the current situation is not driven by a shortage of supply, as was the case with tulip bulbs. Instead, it is driven by a lack of supply of stocks, particularly in the technology sector.

The GameStop situation has been exacerbated by the pandemic, which has led to a surge in demand for stocks, particularly in the technology sector. Retail investors have been drawn to the sector because of the high growth rates and the potential for large profits.

However, the situation is not sustainable in the long run. The current surge in demand is unlikely to continue indefinitely, and the market is likely to correct in the future. Investors should be cautious and avoid taking on too much risk.

Economic News: India’s CRISIL Bank net growth 9.9% at 5 in December

India’s telecom department has cut down the notice period needed to enter into the telecom spectrum business by one year. The move came after the Supreme Court’s interim order. The aim is to make it easier for the authorities to make frequency arrangements for the telecom sector.

Now, almost exactly 385 years after the infamous Dutch tulip mania, one may be justified in asking whether the GameStop ‘tulip’ may be a new phenomenon. After all, some are seeing the rise of Wall Street’s retail investors as a modern-day version of the Dutch market mania, when tulip bulbs were the hot commodity and the market soared.

However, the situation is quite different. The Dutch tulip mania occurred in an era when most people were illiterate, and the idea of owning something as intangible as a tulip bulb was very appealing. In contrast, today’s investors are well-informed and have access to a wealth of information on the internet.

Moreover, the current situation is not driven by a shortage of supply, as was the case with tulip bulbs. Instead, it is driven by a lack of supply of stocks, particularly in the technology sector.

HE "DRAWING room is dead. Long live the drawing room!" is a phrase that never fails to elicit a range of reactions. If you are a purist who believe the grand staircases, formal sitting rooms and drawing rooms are inseparable elements of the Indian home, the notion of their demise will shock you. If you are a modernist, you will accept the changes with a shrug. If you are a connoisseur, you will muse on the past while looking ahead. The reality is that the "drawing room" as we knew it, is no more. The concept has metamorphosed. The rooms that were synonymous with thechkhis and thesitting rooms of early European traders have made way for multifunctional rooms that have become modern living spaces. The evolution of the drawing room is an indicator of the changing social fabric of our society. It is a place where neighbours above and below, family members, and friends come together. The drawing room is the room where the family spends the most time, where conversations take place, and where memories are made.

Victorian drawing rooms were characterized by grand staircases, formal sitting rooms, and drawing rooms. These rooms were designed to impress visitors and convey the status of the household. The rooms were adorned with ornate furniture, chandeliers, and elaborate decorations, designed to create an atmosphere of opulence and formality. The drawing room was the space where the family would come together to receive guests, to socialize, and to discuss business. It was a place where the family would gather to watch theatre performances, read, and engage in serious conversation. The drawing room was also the place where meals were served, and where family members would retire to rest after a long day.

The Victorian era was characterized by a fascination with domesticity and the dignity of the home. In January 2021, you gave me a notebook and promised to return it in six months. You know I have no use for such objects, but I also like having something tangible to hold. Though we have been together for several years, sometimes it seems as if we are reading from different books—although I meet you every week. Your words and ideas are a constant source of inspiration, and I am grateful for the conversations we have had so far.

I am eager to hear more about your life and the challenges you face. I often wonder what it must be like for you to live in a world where so many people are suffering and struggling. It is important to remember that everyone has their own struggles and that your experiences are valuable.

I hope you will continue to share your thoughts and insights with me in the future. I look forward to our next conversation.
